Robbery Prevention

Potential victim's insight is part of the solution

If you're a junior enlisted person, you are among a select and much sought-after group. Your chances of being selected as a victim of robbery are 90-percent higher than any other group in the military.

This unhappy fact surfaced from an analysis of 1980 robbery cases conducted by the Law Enforcement Division of the Army's Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel. The analysis also revealed that you can lower the risk by following some commonsense rules in your daily activities.

More than 90-percent of the robbery victims in 1980 met their fate while traveling alone. This, plus the fact that most incidents involved at least two robbers, makes it clear that the offenders place a high priority on achieving odds of two-to-one or better. Since most robbers depend on strong-arm tactics, rather than on a weapon, to force victims to surrender their property, they usually cannot risk attacking on a one-to-one basis. By traveling with a buddy, the potential victim can reduce the odds to the point of no longer being an acceptable target.

Although alcohol rarely is mentioned in investigation reports as a contributing factor, the large number of robberies occurring late at night and involving young enlisted persons on their way from clubs, bowling alleys, and other recreational facilities serving beer suggest that alcohol consumption played at least a small part in the targeting of victims. This conclusion gains support from the results of civil findings showing that robbers unconsciously monitor the "body language" of potential victims and select those who show signs of physical weakness or lack of coordination. "He just looked like an easy mark" is a typical robber's assessment. It's possible that the consumption of even moderate amounts of alcohol could cause a potential robber to believe that a prospective victim is "an easy mark." Limiting consumption, especially when you're in a recrational facility alone, may help you avoid the robbery-prone syndrome.

As might be expected, robbers most frequently operate in poorly lighted areas near recreational facilities, troop billet areas, and routes between them. Unlighted parade and athletic fields appear to be especially dangerous. Troops can greatly reduce their chances of being robbed by sticking to well-lighted streets when on foot, and taking advantage of available public transportation, such as post shuttle buses.

Robbers often snare their victims by offering a ride back to the billets. You can escape that trap simply by declining rides from groups of strangers, especially late at night.

Most robberies on military installations are committed by soldiers. They frequent the same recreational facilities as their victims. A soldier who broadcasts possession of a substantial sum of money is asking for trouble. You can minimize your attractiveness as a robbery victim by carrying only the amount of cash you will reasonably need for the evening, and by using travelers' checks when large sums must be carried.

The goal of this year's Robbery Prevention Campaign is to put the odds in favor of the victim, and to "Take a Bite Out of Crime." Individual soldiers who follow these tips can help to protect themselves and help the Army meet this goal.

Mismanage–ment

easier to say than prove

There is a lot of talk in the Pacific Northwest about suing the Supply System in order to cancel contracts to repay loans for WNP-4/5, so it is worth rerunning an article that appeared in the Sept. 25, 1981 issue of Power Lines.

Participants in WNP-4/5 can't get out of their obligations to pay for the costs of two plants by claiming construction was mismanaged by the Supply System.

That is the gist of an opinion written by the Oregon law firm of Harmes, Harold, and Leahy and made public by the Springfield Utility Board.

The utility, a participant in WNP-4/5, had asked the attorneys to determine if the utility could escape liability for costs incurred in building the plants if inability to complete them could be traced to lack of "prudent utility practices."

The answer was "no." The firm substantiated this by referring to Section 6 of the Participants' Agreement which says that payment by the Participant "...shall not be conditioned upon the performance or non-performance of the Supply System."

The firm went on to say it would be extremely difficult to prove mismanagement of the projects in court.

"The known fact is that to this date management and failure to follow 'prudent utility practices' have not been established. It is easier to say than prove."

The report of the Washington Senate Energy Committee might not be much help either, the attorneys said.

"Whatever its other virtues, it is doubtful if the findings of the Washington Senate Committee would be considered persuasive in litigation."

They go on to say that as a practical matter, the effort may cost more than it is worth.

"The expense, in our opinion, would be immense, even in proportion to the potential liability to the utility if the projects are finished under the current budget.

"The board...is aware of many additional factors in today's economic and social environment which can and have caused rapidly escalating costs throughout the utility industry.

"Those factors would make litigation based on the charges to date, doubly difficult to prove."

Disabiliy Checks

If you receive Social Security disability checks, you should be aware of a new law effective this year, Bill Ross, District Manager, Social Security said recently. It requires review of your claim from time to time to make sure you meet all requirements for benefits.

Previously, only certain disability claims were re-examined. For example, a review was made if the beneficiary's condition was very likely to improve or if he or she returned to work. Now, each claim must be reviewed periodically, generally at least once every 3 years unless the Social Security Administration determines a shorter or longer review period is justified.

The new law recognizes that many advances in medical science and rehabilitation techniques have been made since 1957 when the first disability payments were made. For example:

Surgery and new rehabilitative aids and devices have significantly improved mobility and enhanced capacity to work for individuals with orthopedic and neurological impairments.

Coronary bypass surgery, pacemakers, and new medications have enabled many people with cardiovascular impairments to lead more acitve lives.

Psychotherapeutic durgs often result in dramatic improvement when given to those with a certain pschiatric disorders.

Significant progress has been made against Hodgkin's Disease and other forms of cancer.

Kidney dialysis enables many people to hold productive jobs.

Microsurgery, prosthetic surgery, organ transplants, new drugs, and new methods of treatment enable additional people to overcome their handicaps.

Nearly 2.8 million disabled and blind workers

Jean Watley's Who's Who

Who is L.S. Wilson?

He's a young sensitive man who holds the position of Student Program Director at Radio Station KTOY. KTOY is a real live radio station housed at Bates Vocational Tech School.

L.S. came to Bates looking for some courses in photography only to learn that there were none available. He decided to look into other fields and wound up at the radio station.

The interesting thing about L.S. is his strong determination to make it. While he says he is shy, his history implies that he can turn on and off his shyness.

After only having been enrolled in school for a week, L.S. had scheduled and taken the state examination for his 3rd Class FCC License.

Now this was indeed a very big accomplishment, L.S. was now able to have his own show and he had not really even attended classes. So he received some on the job training.

"I wanted to do my best," says L.S., "I knew people were listening and was nervous," he recalls.

But inspite of his being nervous, L.S. kept pushing.

He didn't stop at just receiving his 3rd Class License, he set out to prepare himself for the 2nd Class license. The license required to go on the air during the day time. Prior to this he was on a all night show. "I learned a lot," he said, He particularly remembersAl McMillan, a man responsible for taking up time to teach L.S. the ropes .

Again, L.S. succeeded in obtaining his 2nd class FCC license. This was a great accomplishment this time, because he was required to know algebra, Geometry and much more. He said he study day and night, he began to put the information on tapes and listen to them every chance he got, even when he went to sleep.

L.S. believed that if he got all this information in his head, it would all come back to him when he took the test. His theory proved to be correct.

L.S. has not only conquered obstacles he was faced with during the stay at KTOY, but he recalls other obtacles he was faced with during his life...

"While he was in the 9th grade in Jackson Mississippi, he was always encouraged to learn and skill and play sports. He was not required to learn math or reading or the normal subjects most students must have during their school years. When he reached the 11th grade, the school system decided to integrate its schools and at that time, they evaluated L.S. as being only a 9th grade student, L.S. was looking forward to graduate, not go backwards to the 9th grade again, so he quit school and searched for a job.

Not only was he insulted by the attempted demotion, but he had experienced some anxieties from the military. Some representatives had visited the schools and conducted a such for potential military personnel. Most of the students who were in school were classified as ISH, which meant they were students still in school. L.S. was classified as IA, ready for combat. He never understood why he was given this status.

He recalls his Mother, who always worked hard. She was the Mother of 8 children. "Sometimes I would hear my mother crying at night, says, L.S., I wanted to get a job so I could help. L.S. later joined the army so that he could send money home to his family to help make ends meet.

During this interview with L.S., he appeared that he had a fan club, young ladies were getting out of school and coming to the Radio station to see Mr. L.S. Wilson. "I enjoy children and I like people", L.S. revealed. He has a gentle way of handling the young ladies, he really lets them know that he cares.

L.S. has a daughter, 11, her name, Sheila Yvette.

He has 5 sisters and 2 brothers.

L.S. continue being humble and gentle, God will bless you.

'Mind Science

Your Greatest Asset

by Archy Tillman

Easter is a reminder that impossible things still are possible. The Resurrection of Jesus Christ, in the minds of all those who lived during that time was an impossibility. Still today, some disbelieve. Nevertheless, it occurred. And because it occurred every life from that time has been impacted. It is a constant reminder that we too, have unlimited power, if only we would choose to use it.

This is the conclusion of last week's article, Your Grestest Asset. I hope that I made it clear that it is your ability to choose your own life and how it will end. However, this asset is completely useless to you unless you use it. You can control the outcome of every condition in your life.

Everyone knows, however, that you can't control conditions unless of course, you happen to become the head of the government. This is true. so what can we do? We can control our thoughts...and by controlling our thoughts... by using our greatest asset, to choose, we are indirectly able to control our condition.

So unless you are a robot with control buttons, only you are responsible and you future is in your hands. So instead of sitting there felling sorry for yourself, get up and put that energy to some good use.

I offer a special challenge to those of you under thirty and to especially teenagers. Now is the time to begin thinking about what your future is going to be. To "eat, drink, and be merry for tomorrow" is not "where it is". However, if you choose that alternative, I can almost assure you that you probably will not be "merry, eating and drinking" tomorrow. The choice is still yours.

If you have a "chip on your shoulder" as if the world owes you something, think again! The weight of that "chip" is only holding YOU down. Remember the words of the 1960's song, "Mr. Big Stuff, Who Do You Think You Are?" And as John F. Kennedy so appropriately said, "Ask not what your country can do for you but what you...". No one said it would be easy, but quitting is a guarantee that it will be hard.

If you are feeling the "man" is against you because you are Black, then Stop, Look and Listen! Prejudices were here long before you and they will be here long after you are gone. When we let someone else determine our future solely because of prejudices, then it is us who have become the biggest bigot...to ourself. I remember a phrase during the 1960's, "If you find the solution, then don't become the problem." When we "roll over and play dead" we then become a problem to ourselves only!

This is an area in which I am well familiar. I grew up in the deep south during the 1950's and 60's, with twelve brothers and sisters. My father and mother together, never made more than $70 per week. But, the choices I made early in life and still am, helped me to get to where I am today. It wasn't easy, but I did it.

As you begin to explore your choices, make three lists containing (1) the things you do best, (2) what you want to become, and (3) the thing(s) you feel you need to change. Study these lists carefully, then throw away the third list and concentrate on one and two. Decide that you are going to become the best of whatever you do well. You have heard "Practice makes perfect." It does. Whatever you concentrate on that's what you will do best. Many people never do anything well because to much time is spent trying ti improve the things they do least. Since practice does make perfect, you will become "perfect" at doing these things even less. So concentrate on those things you do well, and after awhile they will become dominant. It is true that many of us have several Self-Defeating Behaviors which prevent us from becoming who we would like to be. Again, the key is becoming aware of these behaviors and choosing to do something about them. I will be conducting a series of Eliminating Self-Defeating Behavior seminars, soon. Watch for announcements.

Next week I will begin a series of articles about male, female relationships.

The author, Archy Tillman is a Community Psychologist. He has over 7 years experience working with Black families, individuals and teenagers both doing therapy and community relations work. He has been active in community groups, educational groups, and understands the Black struggle from the personal experience of growing up in the south to working with street gangs in harlem.

THE SENATE REPUBLICAN CONFERENCE

THE "PARTY LINE" VS. THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT

By Sen. Bob Kasten (R-WI)

"There is a danger," warned Justice Robert H. Jackson in 1949, "that if the Court does not temper its doctrinaire logic with a little practical wisdom, it will convert the constitutional Bill of Rights into a suicide pact."

In plainer language, the distinguished Supreme Court justice was cautioning his colleagues against granting special immunities to individuals or groups seeking the violent overthrow of our government and its laws.

Jackson's "practical wisdom," however, was noticeably absent in a precedent-setting 1976 federal court ruling involving the American Communist party. The district judge rejected an action by the Federal Election Commission requiring organizations to disclose the names of financial contributors. That law, it must be stressed, is binding on all other political parties in the United States.

In so ruling, the court cited concerns for the contributors' First Amendment rights to "freedom of association." While that same concern might well be voiced for contributors to the Republican, Democratic, Libertarian, Socialist, and other political parties -- the court made no effort to extend the same privilege to all.

In view of this apparent inequity, Americans are entitled to know why the Communist party, above all others, merits the unique advantage of having secret financial support.

The history, ideology, and declared aims of the Communist party offer little reason to believe that it will participate fairly and democratically in the election process.

From its inception, the Communist party of America's every move has been dictated by a foreign government hostile to the United States -- the Soviet Union.

Such noted ex-Communists as Nathaniel Weyl, Richard Wright, John Dos Passos, and Whittaker Chambers have repeatedly warned that for true believing party members, no law, scruple, or moral code is above the "party line." As Chambers wrote in his moving chronicle, Witness: "Communists mean exactly what they have been saying for a hundred years -- they regard any government that is not Communist, including their own, merely as the political making of a class whose power they organized expressly to overthrow, by all means, including violence."

This critical tenet of Marxism-Leninism remains part and parcel of the ideology of the American Communist party today.

The party's reigning chairman and perennial presidential candidate, Gus Hall, has amply demonstrated his willingness to break any federal law in order to serve his Soviet overlords. In 1951, the Supreme Court upheld the conviction of Hall and other high-ranking American Communists "for knowingly advocating the duty, necessity, desirability, or propriety of overthrowing by force the government of the United States."

The Communist party's attempt to seize control of American labor unions affords another important lesson. In the 1950's the AFL-CIO, UMW, and other major unions were forced to expel Communists from their ranks, after a series of destructive, often bloody, attempted coups ordered by the party hierarchy.

Clearly the action by the court to exempt the Communist party -- and only the Communist party -- from financial disclosure laws is the very antithesis of all that is prudent, just, and fair. To safeguard the election process -- the lifeblood of our democracy -- the Court should insist upon applying fairly the law to all political parties. Since it has not, Congress must.

Pending before the Senate is a bill which provides that the Federal Election Act "shall be applied equally to all persons, committees, and organizations."

The Federal Election Campaign Equal and Total Disclosure Act would do much to temper "the doctrinaire logic" which argues that Communists are somehow above and beyond the law of the land. It would, in the long run, preserve our precious freedoms and protect Americans in all walks of life from those who, in the words of Justice Jackson, would "convert the constitutional Bill of Rights into a suicide pact."

"Conference Reports" is the bimonthly column of the Senate Republican Conference. The opinions expressed are those of individual senators who comprise the new Senate Majority.

WOMEN SPEAKS

Books--A Natural High

April 21st marks the beginning of a week that we as black women should make a note of. What week is that, you ask? Why, that's the time the nation celebrates National Library Week; in other words, "Let's get high on books".

I spend a lot of time in the library--partly because I work there, but mostly because I love reading and finding out more. And really, you should spend some time checking out everything the library has to offer. For instance, did you know you can check out albums and cassettes just like a book? Half of my jazz collection belongs to the Pierce County Library System. And if you're into movies and films, the Tenzler Branch in Lakewood has over 700 films and some projectors at your disposal in addition to some of the latest money-making movies (Elephant Man, Airplane, Winnie the Pooh, etc.) on video cassettes. All to be used free of charge if you meet the broad requirements.

Now walk over to the reference section. They have books and magazines that either meet your need or directs you to one that can. That's where I read "Essence" and "Ebony" magazines. And after they receive the next month's edition, you can check out the older copies.

If you need an opaque projector, carousel slide projector, 3/4 inch video cassette player, or just to cool out, the library is the place to go. Again I urge you to stop by and see for yourself. You will be surprised.

But that's enough about the library. I'm more interested in sharing with you an abbreviated booklist I've compiled from about four or five sources. These are books--sharing the experiences of yesterdays and todays black women --I have on my personal reading list.

First there's the new one by the noted author, Maya Angelou. Titled, interesting along with her other new one entitled, "The Lover".

Moving on to reference materials, Phyllis Wallace's "Black Women in the Labor Force"; "Quotations In Black", edited by Anita King; and Delores Friedman's "Education Handbook for Black Families", all should provide valuable information.

"Essence" did a write-up on Toni Morrison's novel, "Tar Baby" with "Ebony" offering a review of "Gifts of Power; Rebecca Jackson--Black Visionary", edited by Jean Humez.

And for Billy Dee Williams fans, Alice Miller wrote an exclusive titled "The Love Man".

Geared toward our young readers, Eloise Gre enfield has two new ones out: "Alesia", and "Childtimes--a three Generation Memoir".

Not to mention autobiographies by famous women like Flo Kennedy, Ethel Waters, Barbara Jordan, Zora Neale Hurston and one I love the title of, "Unbossed and Unbought" by Shirley Chisholm.

I'm running out of space now, but the list flows ever on. Let me encourage you to compile your own reading list and taste the fruit of someone else's knowledge. As I often say, knowledge is power, and obtaining information from someone else's experiences or research enhances your storehouse of knowledge. Do yourself a favor and stop by your nearest library. You'll be glad you did.

"The Heart of a Woman", it's the most recent in her numerous autobiographical works. Also noted is Mari Evans. Her new one's entitled, "Night Star".

If you're into poetry, make sure you "check out" Nikki Giovanni's "Cotton Candy on a Rainy Day" and Joyce Thomas' "Marked Fire".

NEXT STEP FOR JOB HUNTING

Perhaps the kindest observation one can make about the Administration's new job-training proposal is that it may help provoke a national debate on a new and hopefully, better program to replace CETA, which is being phased out.

The biggest flaw in the new plan is the elimination of stipends for trainees. Traditionally, people in job training programs get small payment conditioned on their attendance. It helps them pay the rent, eat and get to and from the training centers.

By framing a plan that does not include even modest stipends, along with no guarantees of a job at he end of the training period, the Administration virtually assures its plan will exclude the neediest.

I don't think it deliberately wants it to fail; rather is is trying to launch a program on the cheap. It can't be done. Quality costs. Ensuring success means committing resources. No one expects the defense establishment to do its jobs the cheap; why should we expect that job training can be done that way?

Still another flaw is the block grant aspect of the program. State governors, often indifferent to urban areas, would have to much control. Many cities would be cut out, including some that have formed constructive relationships with community-based agencies that perform.

And while it is good that the Administration plan will involve the private sector to greater degree that in the past, that also raises the threat that training would be concentrated on he most hireable among the unemployed.

The people who need the most help and require the biggest effort may be squeezed out to bolster the success rate of he program. In some instances, that will mean training people who might have found jobs anyway at the expense of those harder to place.

Several Congressmen have training bills of their own, and the legislative process will probably yield something quite different from he Labor Department's plan.

But any final version of a job training progam should include three vital elements—it hold focus on the neediest of the disadvantaged, it should have maximum participation by the community-based agencies that can effectively reach those in need of help, and it should be fined at a level commensurate with the problem.

The program to be replaced, CETA, got an undeserved bad reputation through mudslinging attacks that tried to paint it as a leaf-raking haven for chiselers. That's the fate of most social programs. Whatever its failing, CETA, especially after the 1978 changes in the law, did the job it was supposed to do.

It placed people in public service jobs that helped their communities. It provided training for the disadvantaged. Almost half of its participants, who came to the program without any marketable work skills, got unsubsidized jobs, even in a recession.

Now that's a pretty good track record. It could be better. Pentagon programs with far higher failure rates got more funds while CETA got the axe.

CETA served to help many become self-sufficient producers. It is needed at time of Depression for the urban poor. If Congress replaces CETA, it should with a program that serves more people and serves them even more effectively.

We can expect pretty stiff fight over CETA's replacement. Big interests are involved. State officials want more power. City officials want to keep control. Business wants more say.

When elephants fight, the deer had better watch out. So far, there is little evidence that any of the power players is primarily concerned with the stake of the disadvantaged in gaining training, jobs and hope. Unless their nterests are placed placed foremost in the debate that is shaping up, any new program will fall short of what poor people and the nation need.

This Week's Inspiration

James: an Eyewitness

Then He appeared to James, then to all the apostles.
1st Corinthians 15:7

What a thrill those early Christians experienced when they saw and heard the risen Lord in person! How much easier it was for them to tell others that Jesus suffered, died, and rose again because they had been His eyewitnesses! We know that the several Marys, Thomas, Peter, and the others enjoyed this privilege, but who includes James in the Easter list of eyewitnesses?

In the apostle's record of appearances, Paul writes, "Then He appeared to James."

Who was this James to whom Christ appeared? Some identify him as the brother of John and thus as a member of Christ's intimate triad of diciples. Others may think of James the Less, son of Alphaeus, who also was one of our Lord's apostles. It is more probable that this James was the one who is called "the Lord's brother," a relative of Jesus who became the head of the church in Jerusalem. This James was at one time very cold to Christ's cause. What changed him? Perhaps it was the risen Christ's appearance that converted him, as in the case of St. Paul.

At all events, we have in this James another eyewitness of Christ's resurrection.

Now That's What I Call Love

By Sandra Sedgwick

There's an old rugged cross that I close my eyes to see
And it stands upon a hill in a place called Calvery.
Where my Lord cried to His Father
Where for us He shed His blood.
He took all of our sins upon Him.
Now, that's what I call love.

There's a time long ago.
If you will permit me to say.
A gentle Man looked down upon us,
in our sinful way
He delivered us from bondage
Yes, He came down from Heaven above.
So the deveil could do us no harm.
Now, that's what I call love.

He endured every temptation.
Makes me wonder, why can't we??
Especially when we're quick to tell each other that greater is He.

Even when I faint on Him
when I should raise my glove.
My Master tells me, "Get up and try it again"
Now, that's what I call love.

Malcolm's Sports Report

The Playoffs

That time is here again for the Pros. I just miss the college winner by a couple of points, so here I go again. The strongest teams are in the Eastern Conference, Boston, Philly, and Milwaukee with a healthy Bob Lanier. The West is Los Angeles and the Supersonics. Huston could be a spoiler but not the champions. Moses Malone and Elvin Hayes are not enough man power for Seattle or the Lakers. The Bucks will probably play the 76ers if Philly gets past their mini-series. Then the winner will play Boston for sure. That will be a good good game. L.A. and the Supes should meet for the western title. I have seen all these teams play. I like Big Bob and company, but Boston looks the strongest. Magic and Kareem will be to much for Gus and Jack, and I hope Lenny coaches a better game than he has been. So I am going to change my picks to the Boston Celtics in the East and the Los Angeles Lakers in the West. The Lakers to win the NBA title. Some people are asking me what I think Ralph Sampson will do. I don't think he will turn Pro this year. I was watching a track meet last week between Bellermine and Lincoln, The Abes looked awesome.

I said to Butch Batie, the ex track great from Utah, this is the team to look our for in the city and state meet. He said no way, The Wilson Rams will smoke Lincoln and any other team in the state. So I am going to pick the Wilson Rams to win it all. Ok Butch!!

Mel, you can put your groceries on that, "smile". For all you seniors going to college next week I am going to have some helpful hints for you. Have any questions or answers drop me a line: Malcolm 1019 So. 12th St., Tacoma, WA 98405. For all you guys who think you know so much, you don't! Stay in School.

Haley — PROPOSES ELEVATED MONORAIL

Tacoma, WA—State Senator Ted Haley today proposed development of an elevated monorail system linking the Tacoma Dome and downtown. Speaking to Steve Williams of KSTW TV, Haley stated, "Tacoma has the best prospects of any Puget Sound city for new urban development. This plan would help rejuvenate downtown Tacoma and favorably compare Tacoma with San Francisco and Seattle as a place to hold conventions, visit and vacation."

Haley's proposal includes construction of an elevated monorail from the Dome north along East 'C' or 'D' Street, crossing Puyallup Avenue and angling over to the Union Depot. Continuing along the Pacific Avenue center strip, it would angle up the hill at the train track crossing to the Bicentennial Pavillion Hotel Complex, the Broadway Mall and the Pantages.

A longer track could include Old City Hall and return to the Dome via Commerce, 'A' Street or the waterfront. The system would connect several proposed and current projects, including the Union Depot development. "The Depot will be developed as a huge shopping plaza with extensive greenery, elevated to the Pacific Avenue level," Haley explained. "I further suggest that the Depot include also a transportation center with a terminal for airport shuttles, Pierce Transit buses and passenger trains," he said.

Eventually, a rapid transit system will run between Oregon and Canada, stopping at the Tacoma Dome. "My proposed monorail would facilitate passengers' shopping, attending sporting events, performing arts and conventions in downtown Tacoma," Haley said. "It would make Tacoma a unified activity center."

KRAB RADIO

Nine members of KRAB Radio, the non-profit listener-supported station that returned to the air March 1st with revised and shortened programming to help solve its financial crisis, filed a lawsuit in King County Superior Court, March 24, 1982, against the stations Board of Trustees.

Attempting to restore the right of KRAB's members, John Dana, attorney for the plaintiffs, has charged the Board with violations of Washington State laws governing non-profit corporations and the station's own by-laws.

"Among the allegations are the Board's failure to call general membership meetings since 1976, fialure to call elections for the Trustees, and failure of the Trustees to vacate their postiions at the end of their terms," according to Bruce W. Miller, former Operations and Productions Manager for the Station.

The suit also alleges the Board has illegally deprived members of their right to the station's financial and administrative records.

This legal action, intended in part to block the sale of the station, which has been advertised in Broadcasting Magazine, is the latest and strongest move by members and volunteers of the station.

"The Board has discarded the philosophy and purposes of KRAB radio and abandoned good management, frustrating a lot of volunteers and producers," said Miller.

In February, the KRAB Producers Association, comprising volunteers and producers, presented the Board a list of demands, asking that they be settled through binding arbitration.

"The demands included the volunteers' ignored attempts to assist the Board in developing new and effective organizational, programming, and fundraising policies for the station," reported Stanford Smith, a plaintiff in the suit.

To prevent the current cutback in programming, which now excludes most of the foreigh language, international news, and community service programs, the volunteers had organized last Dec ember to help the Board without any staff, to run and rejuvenate the station. In a letter to volunteers and producers, the Board, which had earlier rejected their proposals, claimed the system wasn't working.

At 107.7 fm, KRAB Radio, is one of the first listener-supported stations in the country. Broadcasting since December 1962, the programming has included a diverse repretoire of world music and public affairs. The 45,000 watt broadcast signal reaches into Oregon and Canada and across the Sound to the Olympic Peninsula.

COPING
EXERCISE AND WEIGHT LOSS

By Dr. Charles W. Faulkner

Question: Is exercise a good way to lose weight? Exercise should be used as a part of a weight loss program. However, exercise alone will not result in a significant weight loss and here is the reason: Your body is continuously burning up calories—even when you are asleep.

Your body burns up 65 calories an hour while you are asleep. You burn up 100 calories an hour when you walk or run a mile. If you walk up stairs for an hour, you will burn up 1500 calories. Everything that you do burns up calories.

If you walk for three miles, you will burn up 300 calories, but because each pound of fat consists of 3500 calories, you will lose only a fraction of a pound of fat. If you walk or run 10 miles, you will lose approximately a third of a pound of fat. Sweating also causes a loss of weight but a drink of water will replace the weight loss.

If you lose one half pound of weight with exercise but follow it with a heavy meal, you will instantly replace the weight. A slice of pie has 350 calories. A candy bar has 250 calories. A package of cookies (6 cookies) has approximately 260 calories. If you consume these and other fattening foods, you will not lose weight very quickly no matter how much you exercise.

The primary way to lose weight is to reduce your intake of calories by cutting down on the amount of food that you consume or by replacing high caloric, fattening foods with low caloric foods.

Exercise will help you to lose weight by causing you to lose your appetite and temporarily increasing the rate at which you metabolize or burn up fat. When you exercise, you will tighten and trim the specific parts of the body that receive the exercise: running or jogging will trim the thighs and buttocks. Sit ups will trim the stomach. Pull ups will trim the upper arms and stomach. Side bends will reduce the waist. If you do extensive, exhaustive exercise, such as jogging for five miles or lifting weights regularly, your body will continue to burn up calories for three to five hours after you have finished exercising.

So, you should combine a regular exercise program with your diet. It is better to do a few easy non-exhaustive exercises daily rather than do difficult exhaustive exercises only once a week. Remember, it is the regularity of the exercises that result in constant reductions of weight.

Weight loss results from your body burning up more calories than it consumes. If you burn up 1500 calories a day but consume only 1000 calories a day you will lose two pounds a week. You will have lost eight to ten pounds in a month. In six months you will have lost 60 pounds of fat. The reverse is, unfortunately also true. If you consume 2500 calories a day but burn up only 2000 calories, you will gain two pounds a week or 60 pounds in six months.

now receive monthly Social Security checks. Also, some 2.3 million disabled and blind people receive supplemental security income payments, Ross said.

Under the old law, about 155,000 Social Security beneficiaries could expect to be reviewed in fiscal year 1982. Now, about 520,000 will be reviewed.

When your case is reviewed, you and your doctor will be asked for current information and evidence on how you impairment affects your ability to work. If additional current evidence is needed, the agency in Washington handling the review for Social Security may ask you to take a special examination or test at Government expense. It is important that you cooperate fully when contacted.

After the review, you will be notified in writing of the decision made in your case. If you still meet all requirements, your checks will continue. If it appears that you are no longer disabled, however, you first will be given 10 days to sub mit additional evidence or request more time.

If the final determination established that you no longer meet all requirements, payment will be made for the month your disability ended and 2 additional months. You will be informed of your right to appeal any decision made in your case.

If you have any questions about the review of your claim, contact your Social Security office. The Tacoma Social Security office is located at 1208 So. 10th St, Tacoma, WA 98405. The Puyallup office is located at 803 East Main St., Puyallup, WA 98371.

"I Love You"

This is my commandment, that you love one another as I have loved you. John 15:12

"I love you" - only three short words, yet they mean so much if spoken from the heart.

Victor Hugo, a great European literary genius, wrote, "The greatest happiness of life is the conviction that we are loved, loved for ourselves or rather loved in spite of ourselves."

Jesus gave the disciples a last mandate that first Maundy Thursday evening. He said that they were not only to tell one another, "I love you" but to do it. He knew that to command someone to love, who in his or her sinful nature is more prone to hate, could be an empty command. Yet He said, "Love one another." Knowing well that human beings must be loved before they will love, He qualified His love mandate by saying, "As I have loved you".

Our Lord evaluated true love in the words, "Greater love has no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his freinds."

Christ laid down His life for us, His friends. As He loved us, so are we also to love one another. We who have received Christ's love should find it easy to follow Chirst's mandate to "love one another." Our Lord gives us both the willingness and power to do this.

"Oh, teach me, Lord, to love Thee truly With soul and body, head and heart, And grant me grace that I may duly Practice fore'er love's sacred art." Amen.
